ROOTED IN SOLID GROUND:
JOURNEYS INTO APPALACHIAN LITERATURE

Syllabus topics and a bibliography for teaching West Virginia literature using the literary map, the Internet, and Traditions: A Journal of West Virginia Folkculture and Educational Awareness Potential audiences: Post-secondary classroom teachers, school and public librarians, students in preparation for careers as teachers: English, reading, drama, or speech; students pursuing a degree in Library Science; students, workshop participants or others with a specific interest in West Virginia literature

GOALS

- Reinforce the position of West Virginia literature as a branch of Appalachian and American Literature;
- Familiarize participants with the roots and variety of West Virginia’s multicultural literary heritage as well as its universality and “teach-ability”;
- Create or increase interest in reading, teaching, and discussing West Virginia literature;
- Provide participants with tools to identify and teach West Virginia literature appropriate to various age groups; topical interests; and levels of interest;
- Create or increase participants’ understanding of the importance of recognizing and nourishing the literature of specific locales.

INTRODUCTION

Many of the seventeenth and eighteenth settlers of West Virginia came from Scotland, Ireland, England, Germany, among other European locales, to ports on the eastern coast of North America. They moved on to (what was then) the mountain wilderness west of the colonies. These settlers and others brought their history and heritage, memories and stories, as well as the drive to be independent land owners. They were not here first or here alone, however. They massacred, uprooted, or in the best cases merged with Native Americans. Some brought with them, or later purchased, African Americans as slaves.
The mountains’ mix grew to include increasing numbers of ethnic groups from countries such as Italy, France, Poland, Greece, Belgium, and Spain, etc. The religions represented were as numerous as the groups themselves. Each brought skills and a heritage; all had the desire to record their “ways” for future generations. They did not forget their past homes or their past.

The state’s literature developed from this hodgepodge of cultures, social classes, races, and religions, plus the beauty and constraints of this specific place. The literature is of value; it defines this place, our place, and yet has universal themes and appeal.

The topics and lessons included here offer a small sample of the literature created by early immigrants and their descendants.

As noted educator Jim Wayne Miller of Western Kentucky University said, “By getting more of the students’ lives into the literature they are asked to read, teachers may be able to get more literature into their lives…making them feel valuable and valued.” He added, “Students who have learned to affirm and appreciate something of their own history and heritage are more likely to appreciate someone else’s.” His statements sum up the goals of this course.

Readings
Readings in the genres of imaginative literature (children’s/youth literature, drama, fiction, memoir, poetry, screen writing) will explore common themes, as well as the influence of place. Participants will select six authors, one from each of the six genres, to explore in depth. Each student will write a final paper related to the student’s chosen authors’ contributions to Appalachian literature.

Final Grade
The final grade will be determined by averaging the grades for assigned papers, evaluation of the quality of class room presentations, participation in group work and class discussions.

Requirements and Options
Presentations are required; computer presentations are optional.

A final paper will address the role and significance of West Virginia literature as depicted by their six selected authors.

Texts

“From a Place Called Solid: West Virginia and Its Writers.” Phyllis Wilson Moore

Backcountry: Contemporary Writing in West Virginia. Irene McKinney, Ed.

D. Moore, Phyllis Wilson. “Refuting the Legend of the PIWASH.” Traditions: Volume #2, 1994
Week 2

“WRITING OUR OWN DISPATCH”

Methods: Lecture and discussion with small group activities and readings

Q and A on the essay “Reading, Writing, Region”

How does writing “our own dispatch” relate to the image of West Virginia?

What are the three main points of the essay? How do you agree or disagree with the essay?

What constitutes West Virginia literature? Who is a West Virginia author?

Participants will explore their views on the state’s image and engage in a discussion of the “PIWASH” (poor, illiterate, white anglo-shoeless hillybilly) problem as real or imagined; the class will discuss what it mean to “write your own dispatch” and discuss who, over the decades, wrote the dispatches for West Virginia. Who should write it? Who is writing it now?

In small groups, participants will explore WV census, immigration, slave and Civil War data and consider if, or how, this data might be reflected in the state’s literature and select a spokesperson to present the group’s opinions and observations to the class. They will consider questions such as “where does literature come from?” What makes literature authentic?

Using the poem “We Have Some Writers,” class members will assess their awareness of the authors of West Virginia and the state’s literature by circling the names of authors or works familiar to them (recognize the name; have read their work, etc.). The class will discuss the results.

In small groups, participants will explore the names and locations of the counties in each of the regions of WV (as identified by the State Department of Tourism) and discuss possible differences. Would differences be reflected in the literature written by residents of state’s regions? If so, how? Cite one example
In small groups, participants will consider samples of West Virginia fiction from those provided and select a piece they feel is authentic or non-authentic. Their decision will be explained to the class by a group member.

Examples of Additional Activities/Points to Ponder

Brainstorm words often used to describe natives of various states. Discuss the participants’ perceptions of the image of West Virginia, both in and outside of the state. Discuss the terms bogtrotters (as applied to the Irish); clan (as applied to the Scots), and hillbilly (as applied to the West Virginian). What other states or groups have been labeled with terms that may be seen as derogatory?

Define literature, what it is and is not. Is there such a thing as American literature? California literature? New York literature? When is literature local?

What is Southern Literature? Appalachian Literature? Does West Virginia have a literature? If so, what two words best describe WV literature?

Is West Virginia literature Appalachian Literature with a different? If so, what are the differences?

END OF CLASS 2 DISCUSSION

Distribute Materials Needed for the Assigned Reading for Class 3

1. Criteria for “From A Place Called Solid”
2. Introduction to Language of the Land

Assignment

Read the Introduction to Language of the Land in preparation for an in-class discussion; examine the internet site of the Library of Congress to find the number of literary maps for West Virginia. Compare this number to the number listed by the first state with a map, New Jersey. Compare this with the number attributed to our “mother state,” Virginia.

Examine the genres and criteria shown on the literary map of West Virginia: In the future, how might the criteria change? Compile the names of map authors “new to you” for further research.

Research and write short biographical paragraphs on the four persons to whom the map is dedicated and the two authors with work quoted on the map (Pearl S. Buck & Louise McNeill); be prepared to discuss their suitability as honorees as part of the in-class discussion.

Using an internet search engine such as www.google.com, locate sites related to the words “West Virginia+literature” and “West Virginia+author”; tabulate the total number of sites found and explore two of them; chose one to report on in a subsequent class (5-10 minute report).

Class # 3  “Mapping Our Way”

Materials Needed for Class 3

LANGUAGE OF THE LAND; Outlines of WV; literary maps of various states and the map “Great American Authors;” lists of selected map authors divided by genre and region along with the dates the genres will be covered; Internet site addresses or bookmarks; calendar for notation of assigned dates for presentations

Methods for Class 3

Discuss the Introduction to Language of the Land. Examine the books content as to the literature of WV; discuss the Internet holdings of the Library of Congress as related to WV literature

Lecture on the map’s criteria and the map’s creation followed by Q and A and then small group work. Possible Ideas for discussions: “Regarding the map, what did you learn, or what is new to you?” “What is signified by the map’s art? “What do you like best about the map?” “What would you change?” “Why do some authors appear on more than one state’s map?” “Are there WV authors on the VA map?” On maps of other states? “Why?”

“Would you modify the map’s criteria?” “If so, how and why?”

Do literary maps have value? If so, what is an example?

Class response: research done on the authors assigned; Reports on their Internet findings

Small group work

Examine maps from other states and discuss the impression created by each map; discuss the impression you receive from WV’s map

Examine the map “Great American Authors” created in 1955; list the WV related authors. If you could update this map to the present, how would you change the WV related information?

On an outline of WV, assign map authors to the tourist region with which they are identified; for your own tourist region list any other authors you are aware of and add this information to your personal folder

End of Class 3 Discussion
Assignment for Class 4:

On the Internet locate information for these authors

Belton, Sandra. From Miss Ida’s Porch
Berkley, June Langford. Shannaganey Blue
Byars, Betsy. Goodbye, Chicken Little
Delany, Martin R. Blake
Gates, Henry Louis, Jr. Colored People
Giardina, Denise. Storming Heaven
Janus, Christopher. Miss 4th of July, Goodbye
Kinder, Chuck. The Silver Ghost
Maynard, Lee. Crum
Maillard, Keith. Running
Pleska, Cat. Riding on Comets
Phillips, Jayne Anne. Machine Dreams
Rylant, Cynthia. When I Was Young in the Mountains
Settle, Mary Lee. Addie
Smucker, Anna Egan. No Star Nights
Ware, Cheryl. Flea Circus Summer
Willis, Meredith Sue. In the Mountains of America

1. Evaluate one of the sites as to content: mention of West Virginia; graphics; etc. Report on the site in class (5 minute)

2. Examine the following internet websites: WV Folklife Center at Fairmont State; West Virginia Wesleyan; AppLit. Be prepared to discuss the sites in class: form, content, graphic displays, sponsors, etc.

3. Does your local public or school library display the WV Literary Map or information about WV Literature? Do they have a section/s devoted to WV lit? If so, where is it housed? How is it promoted? Do you consider it adequate?

Note: At this time each student will select a map authors from each genre to research using one of the following: Backcountry: In Their Own Country; Wild Sweet Notes I or II; or Traditions, Vol. ??? The first report will begin in Class 5; and participants will present 15 minute overview about their chosen authors.

As much as possible, the reports shall include information about the authors’ relationship to WV, ethnic background, educational background, family background, employment history, and body of work. Participants may display items mentioned in the literature of the author, come dressed as a character from the work, utilized posters, “sound bites,” or computerized programs, etc.

Presentation dates will be assigned based on the genres selected.
Class 4 “Everybody’s Ethnic”: Children’s and Youth Literature of West Virginia

Methods

This class session will focus on selected work of Sandra Belton; June Langford Berkley, Betsy Byars, Robyn Eversole, Marc Harshman, Christopher Janus, Cynthia Rylant, Alvena Seckar, Anna Egan Smucker, Cheryl Ware, or work illustrated by John Holyfield.

Reports by the students will cover their findings on the same authors

A Few Possible Assignments for throughout the year

Research the awards listed on the map and write a short report on the two specifically assigned to you (Newbery, National Book Award, American Book Award, Weatherford, Lillian Smith, Coretta Scott King, Appalachian Gold Medallion, etc.). Present information on these to the class and give your opinion as to their significance. Consider the question, “Does WV have major stars in the literary firmament?” Who qualified as a star and why?

Is quality of literature judged by awards won or by many standards?

In small groups using the WV literary map, chose four authors with the most outstanding literary credentials and select a spokesperson to present the group’s choices, along with their rationale.

Identify one author on the map from each “tourist region” of the state; write a short essay on how literature from each region might be expected to reflect a different view of WV; use your essay as the basis for an oral report. The report should include one specific example of the WV region’s unique literature. Examples: The Eastern Panhandle’s Confederate leanings are shown in the short story collection If Only by John Peale Bishop; the Northern Panhandle’s industrial-based or “steel mill literature” is demonstrated by Rebecca Harding Davis, Keith Maillard, and John F. Matheus, and Anna Egan Smucker; the Mountaineer as agrarian is shown in the work of June Berkely, Hubert Skidmore, Mellville Davison Post; the coal fields are central in the work of Mary Lee Settle and Denise Giardina.

Examine the holdings in a public or school library for the names of your choice of four authors on the front of the map and determine how many titles the library has by the authors. Use worldcat.com to tabulate the publications of your four choices. Prepare a graph (group in-class project) of the findings.

Visit a WV bookstore and explore the West Virginia section; tabulate its holdings and prepare a graph (group in-class project).
Peruse the index of one American literature text of a local high school or this University or any college or university’s to determine the number of West Virginia authors in the text; add these finding to the graph (in-class project).

Identify institutions of higher learning offering courses in WV literature and/or degrees in WV Literature, Appalachian Literature, or Southern Literature; compile a list of degrees you can obtain in-state on this topic; and a list of authors taught in the courses.

Measurable objectives----A FEW SAMPLES

- Reports on survey results related to schools, book stores, libraries, texts, curricula
- Respond to questions based on selected assigned readings and internet searches
- Written assignments completed on time using correct grammar, style and spelling
- Verbal report evaluation
- Cooperate in group projects; serving as spokesperson when selected
- Final paper regarding the state’s image and the value of local literature (include implementation ideas for libraries and class rooms)

Resources needed throughout the semester for various assignments

- Films, video, audio-cassettes, dramas, and samples of literature, all in the map’s genres and by map authors

Demonstrate the universality of Appalachian literature though thematic pairing of selected works with those of noted literary standard bearers. For example, stories from the collection The Stories of Breece D’J Pancake could be thematically paired with stories by Joyce, Steinbeck, Faulkner; the novel Glory by West Virginia’s Walter Dean Myers could be paired with Steven Crane’s Red Badge of Courage, etc.
